Onioi-Odori Dance
(dance to drive demons out)

Choko-ji Temple is said to have been founded by Hodo Sennin. The main hall which is a national treasure is a magnificent building with Hoshichiken structure that blends Japanese and Chinese style details into the architecture. It is said to have been built during the early Muromachi Period.

The Onioi-Odori Dance of Choko-ji Temple that is dedicated every year on May 5 is a prefecturally-designated intangible folk cultural property. While the origins of this dance are unclear, it can be traced back to the Muromachi Period. Dancing to the beat of taiko drums are the old man (Sumiyoshi Myojin) and red demon holding a torch, the blue demon holding an axe, the black demon holding a sword, and the yellow demon holding a priest's staff. The dance is a prayer for bumper crops and sound health, and is performed to the monotone beat of a bell and includes repetitive movements such as big leaps and swinging the Torimono (the implements held by the dancers). In the final Mochiwari (cutting a large round rice cake) event, a Kagamimochi wrapped in Japanese anise is baked on a torch.

Toryunada, Takino Funaza-ato

: The most perilous passes for ship transport on Kakogawa River

Toryunada

Sweetfish Kakeiryo
(open water conduit fishing)

On the Kakogawa River where ship transport had developed from olden times due to the wide basin area and calm currents, Takasebune (barges) were the most efficient means of transport on river basins until the main mode of transport shifted to overland routes.

The most perilous pass for ship transport on the Kakogawa River was Toryunada. This pass was christened as such by Seigan Yanagawa, a composer of Chinese poems during the late Edo Period, Bedrock juts up from the riverbed, and the obstructed current sending up spray makes for an exciting scene worthy of its name. This geography was made use of in an industry that thrived in the past called “jumping sweetfish fishing” (open water conduit fishing) which involved catching sweetfish stranded on the rocks. Sweetfish fishing is opened for fishing on May 1 every year.

Banshu Kiyomizu-dera Temple borders the former provinces of Harima, Settsu, and Tanba, and is located within Kiyomizu-Tojoko-Tachikui Prefectural Natural Park. It is a Tendai Sect Buddhist temple on Mt. Ontake-san at an altitude of approx. 542m. The temple is said to have been founded by Hodo Sennin, a priest who travelled from India 1800 years ago. It is described in the Konjaku Monogatari-shu (Tales of Times Now Past) written during the late Heian Period as “a miraculous sacred mountain to the north-east of Harima Province.” It is also known as the 25th temple on the Saigoku Sanjusansho Pilgrimage (thirty-three Kannon temples in Western Japan) which still today receives an endless stream of pilgrims. There is a pilgrimage route called “Gotani-godo” leading to Banshu Kiyomizu-dera Temple, and signposts scattered throughout the city to assist pilgrims, which indicates just how many pilgrims come to the city.

Within the temple precincts are magnificent temple buildings (registered tangible cultural property) such as the Daikodo (Great Lecture Hall) designed by Goichi Takeda, as well as the Honbo, the Konponchudo Hall, the Bell Tower, Jizodo (hall dedicated to Jizo Bosatsu), and Tsukimitei, among others. The view is also spectacular, as one can see all the way to Seto Inland Sea.

It is also a place noted for viewing the cherry blossoms. On the path leading to the summit are approx. 600 Someiyoshino cherry trees and Botanzakura cherry trees which can be viewed for about one month period. May is the best time to see the splendid Japanese Primrose flowers (designated as a natural monument by the city).

Kamikamogawa Sumiyoshi Shrine

Kamikamogawa Sumiyoshi Shrine

Within the precincts of Kamikamogawa Sumiyoshi Shrine (designated a historic site by the city) are a group of buildings which include the Inner Shrine (important cultural asset), Worship Hall, Maidono (court music pavilion), Nagatoko, Gokubeya (offering room), and Komiya. The Inner Shrine's ridge plaque indicates the building was built in 1316, and the present day Inner Shrine was rebuilt in 1493. It was dismantled and repaired in 1970.

Within the Shrine precincts, Shinto ritual dance (nationally designated important intangible folk cultural asset) is dedicated on the 1st Saturday and Sunday of October every year, to pray for bumper crops and sound health. In the main shrine, a Shinto priest gives a prayer and drinks the sacred sake, followed by the performance of dances including “Ryonsan-no-mai Dance,” “Shishi-mai Dance (lion dance),” “Dengaku Dance,” Iri-mai Dance,” “Taka-ashi Dance (short stilts dance),” “Okina-mai Dance,” “Chichinojo Dance (old man dance),” and “Miko-no-mai (shrine maiden's dance),” after which children's sumo is dedicated by Gionza. Shinto ritual dance has been strictly observed and passed down in its Kamakura Period format by Miyaza (organization of shrine parishioners in a hamlet) and is known nationwide as a precious dance which is reminiscent of Japan's Middle Ages.
